twenty in number, which originally were part of the correspondence of the Rev. L. Guilding, the well-known naturalist of St. Vincent, who himself was in occasional communication with Swainson. All refer to the Flora and Fauna of the West Indies, especially of St. Vincent and Guadeloupe. The most remarkable are those written between 1813 and 1819 by Ferdinand L'Herminier, a man of wide and sound information and an accurate observer, who afterwards made himself known by his researches into the ossification of the Avian sternum. In the years in which those letters are dated, he followed geological and mineralogical pursuits, for which his residence in the volcanic island of Guadeloupe gave him ample materials. It appears from his letters that he sent two papers to London—one, on Guadeloupe Geology, to the President of the Royal Society, which seems to be the same as the one that appeared about that time in the 'Journal de Physique,' vols. 30 and 31 (1815). The other paper, entitled "Considérations sur l'état primitif des Antilles," was communicated to the Geological Society, but never published. In this memoir, of which the well-kept manuscript is still in the Library of that Society, he enters into the geology of the Antilles generally, maintaining that the Gulf of Mexico was once a Mediterranean sea. I hope that the Geological Society may yet do justice to the memory of a man of genius who has anticipated many modern ideas, if on a renewed examination the paper or an abstract of it should be found worthy of a place in their Journal.

And now my task is concluded. I resign the honourable trust, which you confided to me four years ago, into younger and stronger hands. I do so with that passing regret which we all feel when a chapter in our life closes; but I do so also with a strong feeling of lasting satisfaction. If the term of my Presidency has not been signalized by any measure markedly beneficial to the Society, your affairs, I trust, have not been allowed to suffer or languish; the duties of this chair and the introduction into the inner workings of the Society, have been a source of real pleasure to me. The hearty co-operation of your Council and Officers has lightened my duties, and I offer my thanks to them as well as to all who have indulgently borne with my shortcomings. And now nothing remains to me but to express the hope that I shall continue to be able to be of some use to the Society in the years that may yet be in store for me.
