J.E. MACFARLANE, M.A. (1930-1985)

James Edward MacFarlane was born on 27 April 1930 at Denaby Main, a South Yorkshire coal-mining village. He was the second child and only son of Edward and Harriet MacFarlane. His father, a mineworker, was involved in mining trade unionism and local politics (see item 9/27 in this catalogue), but died after a short illness in 1936. An interview by J E MacFarlane with his mother concerning her early life and first marriage can be found at DD.MF/3/33.

From the age of fourteen, the son was employed, like his father and grandfather at Denaby Main Colliery. Its history and that of the mining community it created was to become one of the main pre-occupations of his adult life. However, two years later he joined the merchant navy, working his way up from deck-boy to able seaman. After eight years at sea he returned to coal mining in 1954 and over the following three years attended the day-release course for mineworkers at the Extra Mural Department (now the Division of Continuing Education) of the University of Sheffield.

In 1957 he won a trade union scholarship to Ruskin College Oxford for the two-year course leading to the Diploma in Political and Economic Science which he obtained in 1959. Between 1960 and 1963 he was a student at the University of Southampton reading for a B.Sc(Econ) in Government and Politics. In his third year, having previously been very active in the Students' Union, he was elected President of the Union. This was a sabbatical post, and at the end of his term of office he decided to leave the university rather than pursue the third year of studies leading to the final examination. A fellow student, Mr Liam O'Sullivan, now a lecturer in the Department of Politics remembers him as 'a man of broad general culture deeply excited by ideas, who was in many ways exceptionally scholarly'.

During 1964 and 1965 he worked in Northern Greece as a field director of one of the United Nations Association's Freedom from Hunger Development Programmes. He then entered the University of Sussex to take a postgraduate course in Labour Studies, leading to the award of the degree of Master of Arts in 1967. This was followed in 1968 by registration for a Ph.D on 'the industrial and social relations of merchant seamen', a subject of which he already had some first-hand knowledge, at the University of Strathclyde. A number of publications resulted from this research (see DD.MF.12/1-5) but the thesis was never completed.

The principal reason for the interruption of this research was probably Mr MacFarlane's appointment in 1969 as a lecturer in industrial studies in the Division of Continuing Education of the University of Sheffield. In this post he was director of the day-release course for mineworkers, the course by which he himself had begun his career in higher education a dozen years earlier. A product of his work on the course was the production of two volumes of essays written by miners on the course, (see DD.MF/7/1-6).

In the 1970s he was engaged in research on the social and industrial history of Denaby Main, and between 1973 and 1982 was registered as a part-time postgraduate student at the Centre for the Study of Social History in the University of Warwick. His life-long interest in the history of the community in which he was born and spent much of his life led to the accumulation of research notes, photocopies, transcripts and original documents which form the greater part of his papers, (see DD.MF/1-6 and 9). His involvement, academic and personal, in the coal industry and mining unionism is witnessed in the items catalogued here in sections 6, 8 and 13. Political affairs, both academic and practical (some evidence of which is to be found in DD.MF/10 and 11) were also to the forefront of his interests and in May 1980 he was elected to Doncaster Metropolitan Borough Council as a councilor for the Conisbrough Ward. His abilities led to his rapid promotion to the position of Leader of the Council after only three years but in 1985 he died suddenly whilst engaged on council business.

1 CADEBY DISASTER RELIEF FUND ADMINISTRATIVE COMMITTEE, 1912-1946

The victims of the two explosions at Cadeby Main Colliery on 9 July 1912 left some sixty widows and over a hundred dependent children. A relief fund was established and its administration placed in the hands of a committee. From the invested donations, five shillings (25p) was paid weekly to each widow and a shilling (5p) to children up to the age of 14.

By 1933 the remaining beneficiaries consisted of seventeen widows but the fall in the value of the investments made it necessary to launch an appeal for £3,000 to keep the fund solvent.

The records listed here, virtually all of which date from 1929 to 1951, are mostly the copy out-letters of the secretary to the committee.

7 YORKSHIRE MINERS' ESSAYS, 1975-1979

These essays were written by mineworkers attending a three-year day-release course in the Department of Extramural Studies (now the Department of Continuing Education) at the University of Sheffield. James MacFarlane was lecturer in Industrial Studies in the department and organiser of the course. In addition to the article by him noted at 7/6 below there is also a short item in the Times Higher Educational Supplement for 31 October 1975, titled 'Getting the message through to the coal face'.

8 NATIONAL BOARD FOR PRICES AND INCOMES : COAL
PRICE REFERENCE, 1970

In November 1969 the National Board for Prices and Incomes was asked by the government (under Section 2 (1) of the Prices and Incomes Act 1966) to examine a proposal by the National Coal Board for a price increase of about ten per cent. The Board produced two reports (items 8/1 and 8/2 below). In the process of preparing these reports the Board consulted with various organisations and individuals with a knowledge of different aspects of the coal industry. Amongst these was J E MacFarlane who was asked to contribute a paper on trade union structure to the industrial relations working party.
